Studies on formulation of Gluten-free biscuits using Moringa oleifera leaf powder

ABSTRACT:

Biscuit is a ready-to-eat, convenient and most popular baked product often made with wheat flour. Since people with gluten sensitivity (celiac disease) cannot consume wheat flour, the present study aimed to manufacture gluten-free biscuits. Considering the medicinal properties and high nutritional value of Moringa oleifera, the gluten-free biscuits were fortified with Moringa dehydrated leaf powder. Gluten free biscuits were prepared using various flours such as oat flour, rice flour, soy flour, butter, powdered sugar and milk. The four different formulations of MGFB were formulated using different concentrations of Moringa leaf powder i.e. 1.0% in MGFB1, 1.5% in MGFB2, 2.0 % in MGFB3 and 2.5% in MGFB4. The sensory analysis of different formulated biscuits showed that sample MGFB2 fortified with 2.0% moringa leaf powder was rated as good and acceptable. Proximate analysis of same sample revealed that the fortified biscuit contains 5.70%, 2.43%, 12.4%, 14.5%, 60.72% and 2.45 % percentages of moisture, ash, protein, fat, carbohydrates and fibre respectively. It was also found to contain good amount of calcium (13.7 %) and iron (16.2 %). Oats and soybeans are rich sources of dietary fibre, calcium, iron, proteins, carbohydrates and also have low glycemic index. Moringa is rich in vitamin C, vitamin B6 and fibre. The fortification of Gluten-free biscuits with various flours and Moringa leaf powder showed considerable changes in physicochemical properties of biscuits and resulted in enhanced nutritional quality. Such formulated product can function as the best option for the patients suffering from celiac disease.

1. INTRODUCTION

Biscuit is one of the wheat flour-based products and is widely consumed due to low manufacturing cost and convenience [1]. However, the gluten in wheat flour limits its consumption, especially for people who suffer from gluten intolerance. Furthermore, wheat flour also has low fibre content. The recent trend has shown an increase in dietary fibre consumption and gluten-free products [2].

Celiac disease is a genetically predisposed autoimmune disorder resulting in damage to the small intestine lining due to consumption of gluten-containing product. Nowadays, there is a high demand for the development of food products that increase the availability of gluten-free food in order to attend an increasing demand. This constitutes an actual technological challenge with a wide possibility for investigation.

The moringa leaf powder is rich in protein, vitamins A, B and C, and a whole range of minerals. A 100g portion of fresh moringa leaf has 9.3g protein, 434mg calcium, 404mg potassium, 738µg vitamin A, and 164mg vitamin C [3]. The leaves have bioactive molecules which include carbohydrates, phenolic compounds, oils and fatty acids, proteins and functional peptides and have great potential to be used in several formulations of food products [4]. The leaves of the Moringa plant contain all amino acids, uncommon among plant sources, and a very high amount of unsaturated fatty acids including linoleic acid. Additionally, Moringa leaf is abundant in almost all vitamins, including vitamin A, vitamin B1 including folic acid, pyridoxine, and nicotinic acid, vitamin C, vitamin D, and vitamin E [5]. A study by Hasaballa et al. also reported that Moringa leaf contained the highest amount of calcium and iron compared to other parts. In addition, polyphenols present in Moringa also contribute to sensory qualities of natural foods derived from it. The purpose of this study is to develop value added gluten-free biscuits using oat flour, rice flour, soy flour, butter, powdered sugar and milk and their fortification with Moringa leaves.
